A deadly shipwreck is just the latest result of Italy's hardline stance, coupled with EU prevention of legal migration and closure of safer routes

Italy migrant tragedy death toll over 60; dozens missing

The shipwreck off the Calabrian coast of Italy on February 26 was one of the worst of the decade. Many say Italy's strict immigration policy is to blame.

Bodies and debris litter the coast of Calabria in southern Italy.

Two days after a boat carrying between 150 and 200 migrants broke up after days at sea, the death toll rose to 67 people on March 1, including 16 children.

Only 80 survivors — from Afghanistan, Pakistan, Somalia and Syria — escaped the tragedy, and many passengers are still missing.

The catastrophe is rare in a region where thousands of migrants from Tunisia, Libya, Turkey and Lebanon arrive each year.

"In Italy, we haven't seen anything like this since October 3, 2013," said Sara Prestianni, who leads the Migration and Asylum program at the NGO EuroMed Rights, in an interview with InfoMigrants.
